

Philip Harding is a consultant medical specialist who lives and works in the electorate of Norwood and would want to see the traditional character of this area retained and conserved. He was for 20 years head of the Department of Diabetes and Endocrinology at the Royal Adelaide Hospital. He was also chairman of the RAH medical staff during that time, has been president of the South Australian Branch of the AMA, has sat on numerous government committees and can speak with authority on redevelopment plans for the hospital. He believes this to be of particular relevance to the people of Norwood who have such ready access to the RAH at its present site, and feels passionately that the hospital should be retained where it is.
