

Kon Briggs has worked in the retail industry for the last 20 years, working with companies both large and small, locally, nationally and also internationally. He is now working in his own company and needing to adapt to change in an ever changing world. He has been able to move forward by working to strong business principles and using common sense and considers this a key factor in decision making.

Kon is a family man with 3 children who cares about their future. He believes that our leaders need to not only worry about today's popularity polls but also be held accountable for their actions when it comes to spending away the future of our children. We need to spend public funds wisely, not just waste 45 years of payments on a shiny new building, for the sake of the current government .
